Software Engineer

As a teenager at school, I was the kid other students approached about issues with their phone or laptop. I was the go-to person for fixing resolving any technical problems.

Today, not much has changed. I'm still the first point of call for technical issues. The difference is I now also develop innovative software to solve the problems of multinational companies. One of my most recent projects involved designing and rolling-out a new piece of software to optimise the efficiency of holiday bookings.
